Dissertation

Speaking of the Self: Theorizing the Dialogical Dimensions of Ethical Agency

Committee: Charles Guignon, Ph.D. and Joanne Waugh, Ph.D. (co-chairs), Lee Braver, Ph.D., Michael Morris, Ph.D., and John Christman, Ph.D. (Penn State University)

Abstract: Dialogism has remained underappreciated in contemporary Western philosophical accounts of human ethical agency. But it ought to be recognized as a prominent feature of such agency. Toward this end, I evaluate dialogical accounts by Bakhtin, Gadamer, Hermans, Nikulin, Heidegger, and Taylor. I draw on Taylor's notion of "moral ontology" to inform my understanding of ethical agency. I then distinguish between two types of dialogism—psychological and interpersonal—and offer my original account of the most prominent aspects of interpersonal dialogism and how they feature in ethical agency. The account I offer is unique, then, in its elucidation of a novel theory of how any plausible conception of ethical agency must recognize several important dialogical features.
